

INVITATION

The German Council on Foreign Relations invites you to a conference

Dangerous Ties: How to Fight the New Networks of Terror and Crime

Monday, March 6, 2017, 9:15 am–5:30 pm

DGAP, Rauchstraße 17, 10787 Berlin

Islamist terrorism and organized crime have developed close ties in recent years and increasingly share organizational structures and methods. Both influence each other and create overlapping milieus. Prisons have become important locales for recruiting criminals for jihadist networks.

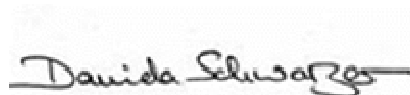

National and international law enforcement agencies as well as decision makers need to incorporate understanding of these developments into their strategies in order to better integrate coordination and prosecution of terrorist and criminal networks. What are the main obstacles in politics and law enforcement – as well as in the businesses and financial sector – to understanding the reciprocity between terrorist and criminal networks? What added benefits could public-private partnerships (PPP) bring in identifying such networks, and how can PPP improve the flow of necessary information? Which actors could contribute to PPP? The conference brings together distinguished criminologists, security experts, and members of the business community to address these questions.

The event is being organized by the USA/Transatlantic Relations Program and will be held in English. The Chatham House Rule applies.

Please RSVP to Yulia Loeva by email or fax (loeva@dgap.org, +49 (0)30 25 42 31 91) by Thursday, March 2, 2017.

We would be delighted to welcome you to this event.

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Daniela Schwarzer
Otto Wolff-Director of the Research Institute, DGAP

Dr. Henning Riecke
Head of Program, USA /
Transatlantic Relations, DGAP